Ch15: four calls, then the verdict

All four readers finished, one round each, no loop. The counted check passes.

Already fixed (my wording, not yours): - The Seneca delay quote now uses Basore's translation, like the rest of the book: "The best corrective of anger lies in delay." - "A zing rarely turns into a fight unless you send one back." It said "only", which made every fight your fault. - Added "That reading is for you to keep, not something to say to her." This stops a husband from telling her "you're just stressed." - Patience now points back to Chapter 1's gap, and your question is introduced as "Chapter 1's question, asked in the moment." Chapter 1 asks it lying awake afterwards; here it's asked in the moment. - "a word for a comment with an edge" (the old "that kind of comment" pointed at nothing).

Your four calls (each is your line)

1. “Most men would say no.” Now: “I think a lot of men, if you asked them whether they’re the best part of their wife’s day, would say no.” The voice rules you set ban the “most men fail” form, because it makes the reader feel like the exception. Suggested: “If you asked yourself whether you’re the best part of her day, the honest answer might be no.”

2. “None of this is surrender” has nothing behind it now. Skeptical readers hear “do whatever she says.” Suggested: put back the line we cut: “None of this is surrender. Letting a zing go doesn’t mean doing whatever she says. It’s my own advice to myself, learned through experience.”

3. “Acts of service.” Now: “Why are those kind? They are acts of service, but that isn’t why they’re kind. It’s because these are normally things that she does...” Two problems. Chapter 12 says acts of service is her love language, so denying it clashes. And “those” covers the foot rub and the listening, but the reason only fits the chore. Suggested: “Why is the chore kind? It’s an act of service, the language she reads best. But it’s kind because these are normally things that she does, and I’m taking chores and work off of her plate.”

4. Two small swaps. - “That’s two people who are equally tired.” → “That’s two tired people.” (“Equally” starts a tally of who’s more tired, which Chapter 6 warns against.) - “tell her I see her” → “tell her what I see her carrying.” (Chapter 14 says a bare “I see you” can land hollow.)

Reply “all yes”, or a number with your change.

After your answer: one quick check on just the changed lines, then the verdict PDF, then land. The plate stays as drawn (it shows the first pair). A plate for all three pairs goes to the inbox.
